I AM...

...because I think. Whether old Descartes nowadays would still define our species with this theory? In doing that he could feel very lonely as this thing about thinking is a strange one. Today he probably would say: I AM because I google, because I use What's App, because I'm on facebook, because I twitter and because I'm omnipresent on the net. The number of my friends is the only proof of my existence. 18 followers mean that I do not really exist yet, 200 not too bad, but with a million I REALLY EXIST.

I AM because one can reach me on my mobile around the clock. My existence is always retrievable. Therefore I AM as long as I have my mobile switched on. Though as not to be misunderstood, I AM happy too to have a smart phone as it does have its practical value.

But our modern existence presents itself also in other ways. I AM because I am wearing Dudibas sports shoes, because I am wearing a hoodie, because I consume. I AM (and always have been) a market factor. I AM because I HAVE.

But if I have nothing, I AM NOTHING.
