RIPE FRUIT

We perceive the colour range from dark yellow to orange and all the shades of red and to maroon as warm colours. A summer warmth pervades our body with a wave of well-being. Red, ripe fruit means sweetness, sugar producing satisfaction and tranquil happiness on the tongue. Soft, melting chocolates with a taste of orange red, the noble purple of sweetness. The colour splendour of the ripe pomegranate, a symbol of beauty, love and its specific sweetness; the apple of Paris with its side effects we also know of.

It is the darkening of the red colours that tells of fire, horror and war; it is the purple shine of the wine that promises great enjoyment but that also can lead to a Trojan end.

The brightening of the red colour takes its fire, makes the sweetness tasteless and causes a scant taste in the mouth. The white fog that reaches for the heart with its cold hand and tries to suffocate the warm light has however at some point to give way to the sun.

And then the first ray of the sun will hit the red fruit on the windowsill.
